

Material Culture Perspectives

Series Editors: Martin Brückner and Sandy Isenstadt, University of Delaware

Material Culture Perspectives publishes innovative studies on material culture in literary, visual, and historical studies. The series seeks titles that engage with physical objects – broadly defined and including their formal attributes, ascribed functions, contribution to larger processes and practices, or symbolic significance. The books in this series address a wide range of topics, and encompass local or global contexts. This series invites treatments that offer provocative, reflective, and theoretically informed approaches to material culture studies in the twenty-first century.
